

ECOFEMINISM AS POLITICS : nature, Marx, and the postmodern

Preface and Acknowledgements

An integrating politics
Who speaks and how?

PART I - WOMEN AND ECOPOLITICS

1 ecology re-frames history

The green conjuncture
Species, gendered and postcolonial others
An old blindspot
Agents of history/nature

2 ecofeminist actions

A global tapestry
The roaring inside her
Deepening ecology
Bio-colonisation

PART II - AN EMBODIED MATERIALISM

3 body logic: 1/0 culture

The politics of difference
Reproductive consciousness
Boundaries and spills
In the name of the father
Attunement

4 man / woman = nature

Head, hand, and womb
The purity of science
Silver and spice
Orbital debris

5 for and against marx

Nature, his real body
The chain of appropriation
Necessity v freedom
The transcendent tool
Production/reproduction

6 the deepest contradiction

The inconsequential society
Capital incarnate
Natural and gendered resources
Inclusion/exclusion

PART III - MAKING POSTCOLONIAL SENSE

7 when feminism fails

The mothering class
A culture of narcissism?
Global structures: critical mass
Shame and assimilation

8 terra nullius

Ecological economics
Corporate harmonisation
Capacity building
Very primitive accumulation
Models of self-reliance

9 a barefoot epistemology

The neo-feudal order
Grounded solidarity
Pleasures of enduring time
Indigenous knowledges
Holding and sustainability

10 as energy / labour flows

Boundary conditions
Extracting the surplus
Bio-energetics
Nature's holograph
Self as ensemble
A postmodern marx?
The meta-industrial vantage point

11 agents of complexity

Enfoldment and resonance
Erasure and non-identity
An embodied materialism
And a precautionary ethic

12 beyond virtual movements

Sociology and bio-politics
The democratic subject
States of mind
Four revolutions in one
Coda

Index